

People Come & Go: Love Them All

By Jim PathFinder Ewing (Nvnehi Awatisgi)

Sometimes we get so hung up on spiritual concepts and ideas we become blind to how they play out around us at any given time -- and at all times. For example, "karma" and "reincarnation." Being in polarity, the wholeness of any given situation may not be apparent at the moment, but may become clear later. This is especially true in relationships, regarding people who mean a great deal to us. Every person's life has timing and personality aspects. Things happen when they do for a reason. If things aren't happening the way you like when you want them, you should look around and see what aspects of your "self" you have not completed or integrated to see what is holding you there. Or you should look to see what opportunities you may be missing. (Yes, we do have opportunities for healing, growth and development that can linger for quite a while until our continuing refusal, denial or ignorance about them causes the "window" of opportunity to close.) If your problem is with a relationship, you need to realize that all personal bonds have time limits on this plane. That goes for infants who (too soon, it seems) are going off to the first day of school, to graduating from high school, to going off to college, to having families of their own, to parents and other older loved ones who go from young and vibrant parents themselves (with all their strengths and weaknesses) to the grave. Just as our karma brought us to these people and our karma changes as we interact with these people, we will see them again, as we have seen them before, through reincarnation. Spiritually, we shouldn't get hung up on "time," since time is limited to this physical plane. But time is a powerful emotional element for us here. Some relationships are destined to last a lifetime and some for only a day. Some for only an hour. Some for a passing minute on the street -- that, in itself, can have lasting, lifetime consequences. Be grateful for whatever and whomever is around you. That will open the doors of your expansion into love and abundance. Only fear and clinging to the status quo, which cannot stay the same, causes pain, suffering and sorrow. By being grateful for what the Creator offers us in each moment, our eyes are opened to the abundance of the world, the infinite variety of gifts that are offered to us each and every moment, and the vast array of opportunities for growth and development. Open your eyes and see what is before you, in newness, in gratitude, love and respect. Know also that people may still remain in a relationship or friendship long after the connection that brought them together has dissolved. This goes for people who are still on this plane and those who have passed on. We are all connected. Our consciousness can connect with anyone at any time.

We will see them, be with them, when the time is right. Although most people would like to find their "perfect" partner for life, their karmic blueprint and current level of self-awareness can dictate otherwise. Be aware of this. There are many "soul mates" in life, each with a purpose at any given time. If one is meant to be a lifetime partner, it will happen. Or, at least, the opportunity for it to happen will happen. (We do have free will, but sometimes have to take circuitous routes to get where we agreed to be.) It couldn't happen otherwise, given the karmic situation of each person at any given moment, just as the conditions became "right" for them to come together. If we learn our life lessons, our vibrational levels will change. So within, so without. Our outer world changes as our inner world does. Those who resonate with us will stay with us (our own vibrational levels can have profound effects on those around us without even speaking a word; and our influence is felt beyond our immediate physical surroundings as we are all connected, energetically, everywhere). As new people are brought in through our increasing vibrational levels, some old ones will be left behind, some will drift away. That is change. Nothing on this plane lasts forever. But all that is on this plane is connected with forever. Though we are caught in polarity, our souls are eternal. Time exists only in polarity. Our bodies (physical bodies) exist only in polarity, connected here to the Earth. Both exist only where there is long or short (polarity). Eternity is oneness, wholeness, no short or tall. We approach eternity through unity consciousness or Christ consciousness, where the ego/personality is recognized as limited in time and space, as are our bodies here. That eternity, that oneness, wholeness, limitless integration of polarity, or combination of short and tall, is where we came from and where we will go. Our souls and the spirits of every thing are connected to it. We are just enjoying the parade before us and our part in it, now. We drew the blueprint for our being here, now, in this place, wherever each of us may be; each of us set that plan into motion by agreeing to be born who we are, where and when in time and space from limitless eternity to learn our lessons here. That is reincarnation and karma in one. We must only remember that blueprint, "connect the dots" of the clues we have around us at any moment. Our real purpose at any given moment is to fit ourselves to be of maximum service to the Creator and the people around us with the unique gifts we have as individuals, maximizing ourselves, contributing to our world, being what we were sent here to learn and be. We learn what we are; we are what we teach; we teach what we learn. We must practice what we are drawn to, making use of what's around us, learning our lessons, giving from our hearts, and loving the people, places and things the Creator gives us that we co-create in our lives from our past and in our present and toward our future, now. We live and grow, heal and develop by loving; we waste and wither, die by withholding what we love. Our excuses not to love what the Creator has given us and what we co-create at any given moment in time are barriers of our own making. Each withholding is a new barrier, a new limitation in the co-creation of our life, the now. These barriers are strengthened by our ego/personality's limitations, the refusal to see oneness, the clinging to polarity of ego/personality. These limitations are only ego/personality's fear of losing its tyrannical, limited, ephemeral control. The way out of limitation is to limit limitation by seeing past it, at the wholeness of every single moment. And, in that way, the past can be healed. The future is infinitely open. Living and loving in the present is the key. That is the reason for reincarnation; the way to break karma and create yourself anew. Go for oneness. Go for joy. Go for love. Refuse to be bound by time and space. Live the life you chose, your blueprint, your soul's remembering, the life the Creator gives so freely and completely in each moment and gratefully accept what is offered you, uniquely, to bring your Divinity into manifestation. Every moment is perfect. We must always remember that. If it doesn't seem so, we must open up to the possibilities, step aside from ego/personality and try to see as the Creator sees, as our karma, reincarnation and inherent perfection have chosen, giving us each moment the key to the lock of our self-imposed limitation in time and space. The right people, places and things are always with you at any given time. Know that you are loved. Eternally. Enjoy the people in your life. Now. See that you are eternal, each physical step before you as one more toward wholeness. People come and go. Love them all. That is the doorway to eternity.

Aho.
